We are pleased to introduce you to artist Steadman Upham, a man of many interests, talents and accomplishments. He has been painting throughout his adult life.

Of his paintings, he states:

"When I sit down to paint, it is all about the color for me. I've been painting on and off throughout my adult life, and each canvas that I touch becomes a journey around the colors that I mix. I paint with acrylic gel that I mix with Nova Color pigments and thin with gel medium and water. The heavy pigment load of Nova Color paint produces a vibrancy and texture that I find fits my pointillist style perfectly. Pointillism relies on the application of pure colors that are juxtaposed in a complimentary or split complimentary manner to create visual drama and movement on the canvas. In this regard, the subject of the painting is of secondary importance to the play and interaction of the colors used by the artist. Traditional pointillist paintings rely on a white ground, but I have found that by varying the color of the ground across the spectrum, greater movement and color contrasts can be created. The paintings I create in this style are thus measured explorations of color."

--- Steadman Upham

Upham has been President of the University of Tulsa since 2004, having served for 6 years as President of Claremont Graduate University in California. He earned his Ph.D. and M.A. in anthropology from Arizona State University. His B.A. was from the University of Redlands where his majors were in English Literature and Spanish. He was a practicing archaeologist and teacher of anthropology and has written or edited 10 books and numerous articles on these subjects. His paintings are in numerous collections.
